Community-centred Interventions

Use the template provided below to map how existing powers can be utilised to influence health outcomes

This is the opportunity to map the assets in the community which already exist, and then review how they fit into the evidence-based options provided by the family of community centred approaches in template 2.

There may be gaps that need to be filled. Reflect on whether if there is a gap in meeting needs, this can be filled by one of the types of approaches in the template below.

COMMUNITY CENTRED INTERVENTIONS TEMPLATE

RELEVANT ASSET: Example: Mutual aid group for older people, or befriending service for young carers. Is it run formally, informally and is it sustainable? How does it impact on the priority identified and how well known is the intervention?

RELEVANT PARTNER: Are there formal links with existing community assets such as service level agreements? Can this activity help with the overarching aims?

RELEVANT INFORMATION: Notes on whether the activity is formal, stable and sustainable, whether it is feasible or appropriate to build on or contribute resource to. Careful consideration guided by VCS partners in the group is critical.

Family of Approaches

Public Health England has mapped types of assets in the community. Resilient communities often have a spread of community assets at their disposal, reviewing the types of assets in the community contributes to mapping what there is in the place. It is not necessary to tick each box, but consider together, what assets might be missing, what groups might be underserved, or what informal arrangements achieve outcomes that formal arrangements have not done so far. Prevention of ill-health starts in the community.
